Annex I	Standard International Trade Classification (SITC) at the 3-digit level	106

Introduction

The attached statistics show African imports of major industrial commodities and thus the magnitude of the individual countries' foreign exchange expenditures on those commodities. The data may also serve as a basis for identifying possible areas of foreign exchange savings. Services are not included in the statistics. The data have been compiled for 1982 and 1983 and are aggregared for each African country as well as for major commodity groups. They are summarized in Tables I and II.

The data are based on statistics from by the United Nations trade tapes and compiled by aggregating the rest of the world's exports to each African country. Very little information is available in respect of the African countries themselves. For example, at the time of compiling the data given here, only 15 African countries had submitted to the United Nations their 1982 trade statistics and only three African countries had submitted reports in respect of 1983. Furthermore, no data were available for the following countries: Botswana, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Lesotho, Rwanda, Sao Tomé and Principe, Swaziland and Zimbabwe. The limited information from African countries means that intra-African trade is not fully accounted for and the data therefore underestimate the actual foreign exchange expenditures in the 42 countries covered, especially for 1983.

Furthermore, the data are given in FOB- and not CIF-prices thus resulting in a further underestimation of each country's foreign exchange expenditures. On the other hand, the data may include commodities which have been re-exported from African countries, thereby involving overestimation of possible expenditures.

Despite the above-mentioned limitations, the data do show the great variations in import levels among African countries (Table I) and relative expenditures by groups of major commodity imports to the region as a whole (Table II)

An appreciable share of foreign exchange is spent on food of which nearly half, approximately US$4.2 billion in 1982, stems from the importation of "cereals and cereal preparations" including such staple foods as rice, maize, wheat and flour. This should be seen in relation to the high priority accorded in the Lagos Plan of Action to bringing about a sustained increase in the production of food, especially of cereals.

The importation of raw and intermediate materials also constitutes a sizeable part of the African countries' foreign exchange expenditure. While some of the materials grouped in this category may of necessity continue to be imported from outside the region, others may be supplied from within the region or substituted by locally available raw materials or locally produced intermediate materials. Examples of the latter are materials in such commodity groups as 24 (wood, lumber and cork), 26 (textile fibres) and 25 (essesial oils including soaps) which currently account for a considerable share of the foreign exchange expenditure on raw and intermediate materials.

According to the data on energy-related imports, the major importers of petroleum and petroleum products (group 33) include both non-oil exporting countries such as Kenya, Morocco and Sudan and oil-exporting countries such as Egypt, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria and Tunisia. Together they account for approximately one half of the total imports in that commodity group.

The overall external dependence of the region is compounded by the fact that of the commodities selected, the largest portion (47 per cent in 1982) of foreign exchange was spent on imports of capital goods i.e. machinery, transport equipment and manufactures of metal.
